General background: historical approach to specialised discourse and culture - theorisation, epistemological positioning, methodology, diachrony as a means to access specialised cultures, case studies

Possible paths to be developed (non-exhaustive list):

- discursive traditions: how can the paradigm of discursive traditions, developed inter alia by the German Romanists following Coseriu (Tübingen School), be implemented for specialised discourse?;
- diachronic approach to terminology: how can the historical dimension be integrated in the descriptive and/or normative approaches to terminology? What do we learn from the evolution of the terms of the development of a specialised culture?;
- diachronic approach to specialised dictionaries: how did the macro- and micro-structures of specialised dictionaries evolve? What room is there for the representation of specialised knowledge in their historical dimension?;
- the historical construction of specialised fields: how are texts and discourse structured in a given field? How does the evolution of sciences and techniques lead to the formation of new domains and their techniques?;
- research work on professional journals and reviews (including academic discourse): How do we deal with such largely-unexplored corpora? What methodological issues should be addressed regarding the construction of historical corpora in LSP contexts?;
- innovative contribution of corpus linguistics to the methodology of the historical approach, more particularly in the theorisation of "specialised cultures";
- the evolution in the way lay persons relate to specialised discourse in the wake of new technologies: how is specialised knowledge propagated and how does it circulate in blogs, forums, etc.?
- the ethnographic dimension of LSP: how do we reconstruct the study of a specialised environment in its historical depth?;
- the embedding of specialised knowledge and discourse: is there a historical FASP at the intersection of diachrony and literary texts?;
- ...
